Feb. 9th: Women of the Ballet Russe

After spending more time with the highly influential American heiress Winnaretta Singer, we appreciate the beautiful harp music of French composer Germaine Tailleferre before moving on to Serge Diaghilev's Ballet Russe. This legendary gathering of artists is venerated for its great male innovators such as Nijinsky, Bakst, and Stravinsky. But many of its most extraordinary artists and contributors were women. Nijinsky's sister Bronislava Nijinska was one of ballet's most distinguished creators, both as a dancer and choreographer. The avant-garde artist Natalia Goncharova designed groundbreaking costumes and scenery for ballets such as the Golden Cockerel and Les Noces. And the brilliant, charismatic heiress Ida Rubinstein braved incarceration in an asylum by her horrified family to become one of the most fearless modern dancers in Paris, acting, commissioning, and eventually directing her own ballet company with Nijinska as a leading choreographer.
